PLENARY A

Discovering the Vancouver Model, Parsing the Cullen Commission, and Recognizing Deadly Threats of State-Sponsored Crime

11:15AM - 12:15 PM

Sam Cooper

Investigative Reporter and Author of 'Willful Blindness' Ottawa, ON

Sam Cooper started to report on and expose what has come to be known as the “Vancouver Model” of transnational money laundering after 2010, and his work has contributed to several public inquiries in British Columbia. In this presentation, Cooper will explain how his reporting gradually pieced together pieces of the model – casinos, massive offshore real estate investment, transnational drug-trafficking – and ultimately revealed how underground banking and money laundering make it all work. Cooper will walk through the police and casino investigations that prove and quantify the model and demonstrate how bundles of drug cash easily wash through Canadian casinos, but more importantly, penetrate Big 5 banks and large scale real estate developments, through onshore and offshore financial businesses. He will explain the most important findings of B.C.’s Cullen Commission, and also point to important evidence the Commission neglected to examine. Finally, in light of the tragic invasion of Ukraine, Cooper will explain how the Vancouver Model and “strategic corruption” are leveraged by the world’s most powerful state-sponsored crime groups and intelligence agencies and related tycoon and oligarch networks, and how Canada’s anti-money laundering and organized crime laws have failed to recognize and mitigate these national security and financial integrity threats.

WORKSHOP 1

Over a Year Later: How Have the June 2021 Requirements Impacted Reporting Entities?

12:30 - 1:30 PM

Jean-Francois Lefebvre
AML Compliance Consultant
Montreal, QC

Money Laundering in Canada 2022 takes place sixteen months after the June 2021 coming into force date of the regulatory changes. Jean-Francois will bring his broad experience and personal insights to discuss how the implementation period of these new requirements has impacted reporting entities. He will highlight challenges faced by various organizations and expected challenges to over the coming months. He will provide some concrete examples and explain how the reporting entities’ responses may be viewed by FINTRAC. Pros and cons of various approaches taken by reporting entities will be discussed.

October 17, 2022

WORKSHOP 2

Self Assessments: Engendering Trust with Your Key Stakeholders

2:30 - 3:30 PM

Daniel Speirs
Consultant
Vancouver, BC

Maintaining the accuracy and relevance of a reporting entity's AML/CTF Compliance Program is a critical element to control for possible deficiencies and mistakes. The departure of compliance personnel or the merging/takeover of reporting entities will sometimes lead to the discovery of compliance deficiencies that have impacted on the program's structure and/or its delivery. Getting such a program back on track can be daunting at times; let alone ensuring that service providers do not become alarmed. Daniel will discuss the value in self assessments, both as the result of a significant change at an organization as well as a good practice in one's quality control routine.

WORKSHOP 3

Everything Old Is New Again: The Familiar Face of Consumer Fraud in Cryptocurrency

3:45 - 4:45 PM

Ryan Mueller
Phantom Compliance
Calgary, AB

Bull markets, bear markets, securities regulations, MSBs, NFTs - what is really going on in crypto these days anyway?! Ryan Mueller leverages his breadth of experience with various business types and clients in the Canadian market to discuss how to identify red flags of crypto fraud, how to prevent losses for victims, how to respond to fraud schemes quickly, and how to work with staff and stakeholders at crypto exchanges to obtain assistance and build relationships and co-operation. Ransomware, fraudulent investment platforms, bank examiner schemes and many more. Speaking from real world experience in multiple different crypto businesses in Canada and the world at large, Ryan will outline how to identify, prevent, and respond to fraud to limit exposure, assist law enforcement, and EVEN seize and recover funds

WORKSHOP 4

Managing the Risks Hidden in the Detail: STR Detection and Submission

11:00 AM - 12:00 PM

Angelo Coppola
Globex 2000
Montreal, QC

A key component of a robust compliance program is the detection and submission of suspicious transactions reports (STR). FINTRAC devotes considerable effort during a compliance examination in assessing the controls put in place by reporting entities to detect and file STRs. It seems that some reporting entities have come up short regarding this obligation since quite a few of the administrative monetary penalties recently issued by FINTRAC were for failure to submit STRs. This session will review and discuss the methods used by FINTRAC to assess reporting entity compliance with STR requirements. It will be of interest to both the seasoned practitioner and the novice, providing insight and practical guidance to reporting entities regarding monitoring for STRs and effectively communicating the reasonable grounds to suspect in Part G of the STR.

WORKSHOP 5

Banking the Cannabis Industry: Overcoming Pitfalls with Good Practices

12:15 – 1:15 PM

Brenda Mitchell
Connect First Credit Union
Calgary, AB

Brion Nazarro
ACCCE
Lone Tree, Colorado

Cannabis producers and retailers continue to be onboarded by financial service providers, who must undertake all the necessary due diligence from a business sector faced with concerns about them being used for money laundering activities. Experience in Canada with cannabis stores shows they are cash-intensive businesses, which increases the level of risk for commingling of criminal proceeds with legal product sales. Managing those risks through comprehensive AML/CTF compliance control practices is one approach among others to enable a reporting entity to effectively manage such business relationships. Both Brenda and Brion will explore this risk management at the application level and supplement their ideas with practical examples.

WORKSHOP 6

Under the Hood of FINTRAC's Compliance Examinations

2:15 - 3:15 PM

Kelly Young
FINTRAC
Ottawa, ON

FINTRAC's Manager of Examinations, Kelly Young, returns to offer a smorgasbord of compliance management topics. She will discuss how the examination team decides what aspects of a reporting entity's compliance program will become the focus of an exam. She will report on deficiencies that are emerging, and will share case studies to illustrate topics being highlighted in her presentation. Kelly will look at the detail behind various AMP findings and discuss how reporting entities might re-configure compliance management activities to prevent falling offside with regulatory requirements. She will also discuss some of the new directions and strategies being developed by FINTRAC staff to assist reporting entities better manage their compliance responsibilities and avoid future deficiency findings.

WORKSHOP 7

Real Estate Brokerages in Canada through the Eyes of Compliance

11:00 AM - 12:00 PM

Claudius Otegbade
WFCU Credit Union
Toronto, ON

The real estate sector has been consistently fined by FINTRAC since AMPs became a tool used to address compliance program deficiencies identified during scheduled compliance examinations. In the last eighteen months, these AMPs have increased in size and continue to be representative of major deficiencies in the structure and application of the programs being reviewed. In addition, the real estate sector has been increasingly under the government regulatory microscope, with the Cullen Commission in BC focusing on such issues as money laundering within the industry. The findings from that Commission are due to be released in the second quarter of 2022. What does all this mean from a compliance perspective and how brokerages must meet their regulatory obligations? Claudius will draw on his experience both as an AML consultant and as a reporting entity CAMLO to reinforce our understanding of what real estate professionals across Canada need to have in place for a complete and effective AML/CTF compliance program.

WORKSHOP 8

We're Approaching Crypto Crime Incorrectly. What Can We Do Differently?

12:15 - 1:15 PM

Matthew Sampson
Grey Wolf Analytics
Fredericton, NB

Dhirendra Shukla
Grey Wolf Analytics
Fredericton, NB

Cryptocurrency was built to disrupt the current centralized banking system by introducing a new decentralized blockchain technology that was transparent, faster, and cheaper. What does this really mean, and how does it really affect anti-money laundering? During this workshop, Matthew Sampson and Dhirendra Shukla will be breaking down and answering these questions, and then building back up how blockchain is being leveraged to provide new-age solutions for cross-organizational investigations and AML. Paradoxically, the solution to decentralized finance crime may involve leaning into decentralization, rather than fighting it.

WORKSHOP 9

FINTRAC's Efforts and Observations: Today, Tomorrow and From Across the Globe

2:15 - 3:15 PM

Stacey Hopps
FINTRAC
Ottawa, ON

Stacey Hopps will explore FINTRAC's role in aiding regulatory and enforcement agencies' investigations based on the strategic analysis generated from the various reports received across reporting sectors. She will highlight case studies to show how FINTRAC's contributions have played a role in the outcomes that occur. She will bring everyone up to date on immediate plans and timelines associated with those plans. Stacey will also look at the efforts being made across other jurisdictions that are contributing to the financial intelligence community's global efforts to manage the risks associated with money laundering and terrorist financing. Finally, she promises to add a FINTRAC perspective to the observations made by previous speakers at this year's conference.
